Munters becomes associate member of IPC

Munters, a global manufacturer of climate-control systems for a variety of applications, including state-of-the-art ventilation systems used in broiler production, has joined the International Poultry Council as an associate member.

Founded by renowned Swedish inventor and entrepreneur Carl Munters in 1955, Munters celebrated its 60th anniversary in 2016, and is a global supplier of ventilation equipment for producers of broilers and other livestock worldwide. The company is known as an innovator in climate-control systems and technology for intensive commercial poultry production.

From its global headquarters in Kista, Sweden, Munters has manufacturing representatives in numerous countries across Europe, Asia, and the Americas.

The IPC representative for Munters is Jacob Gazit, global industry manager for poultry.
