Erlich Foods International Joins IPC

Erlich Foods International, a company based in Los Angeles, Calif. (USA), has become an associate member of the International Poultry Council (IPC).

Founded in the 1940s by the late Israel Erlich, Erlich Foods International specializes in fresh and frozen poultry for domestic and export sales. Export Manager Jim Weston is the company's IPC representative.

IPC President Jim Sumner welcomed Erlich Foods International as the Council's newest associate member, bringing the total number of associates to 43. Poultry associations in 22 countries are also members of the IPC which represents about 85 percent of the world's poultry production and nearly 95 percent of global trade in poultry meat.

"IPC's diverse membership continues to grow," Sumner said. "The organization serves its members by bringing together leaders from around the world to develop and recommend policies affecting the poultry industry and to promote a common global understanding of and confidence in poultry products as the preferred source of meat protein."
